News from the field

From the CDC: May is Mental Health Month — an important time for organizations and individuals across the country to raise awareness, reduce stigma, and advocate for better access to mental health care. Mental health is critical to overall health and well-being, and it is deeply connected to overdose prevention. Mental health conditions can affect anyone. Recognizing the signs, encouraging open dialogue, and showing compassion can help support people's well-being and get them connected to care.
