July is National Minority Mental Health Awareness Month
Recognizing Mental Health Equity in Michigan's Diverse Communities

July is recognized across the nation and here in Michigan as Minority Mental Health Awareness Month, also known as BIPOC Mental Health Month. This observance shines a light on the unique mental health challenges faced by Black, Indigenous, and other People of Color (BIPOC) communities, particularly in the context of access, stigma, and culturally competent care.

In Michigan, where diverse populations contribute to the strength of our cities and rural communities alike, mental health disparities continue to impact communities of color at disproportionate rates. Efforts to close these gaps are significant as we recover from the lasting effects of the COVID-19 pandemic.

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, Office of Minority Health (OMH), encourages state, tribal, and local leaders, as well as healthcare providers, community organizations, educators, and faith leaders, to join the conversation and promote resources that reduce stigma and expand access to care.

How Michigan is Supporting Community Health:

- Health Systems and Hospitals across the state are engaging in partnerships to expand culturally informed services.
- Community Health Workers and Behavioral Health

Specialists continue to provide support tailored to Michigan's diverse populations.

- Faith-based and Grassroots Organizations are helping to normalize conversations about mental health in culturally respectful ways.

This month, and year-round, Michigan joins the national effort to ensure that all communities have the tools and support they need to thrive mentally, emotionally, and physically.
