Internship Resource Creation

The product you create by the end of the semester will be used by the Michigan Prevention workforce. The product must be a well-researched, well executed product which abides by Prevention Network's brand guidelines. The type of product you create has some flexibility according to the research, the skills that serve you best, needs of the field, and current prevention priorities. The subject of the product and research will be determined with the help of your internship supervisor(s).

In your research, you may consider what products have already been created – both by Prevention Network and by other entities. This is to avoid duplication and to inform your development choices. Your internship supervisor(s) can help you navigate where to look for resources and what the current needs of the field are, so you can be sure to create a product that is original and specific to prevention in Michigan.

Depending on the product you make, your product may be featured on Prevention Network's website, email campaign, newsletter, social media, webinars, and/or in meetings and projects in the state or nationally. The way we use your product largely depends on the product itself. Your work will also be yours to include in a portfolio, as you apply to positions after graduation.

Examples of potential products include:

- A white paper on current trends and prevention practices
- A reference guide to current evidence based practices
- A Toolkit for prevention specialists to use within their communities
- A webinar on coalition building, implementing evidence-based best practices, or evaluation
- A database of prevention related data sources
- Other ideas that you and your supervisor(s) deem appropriate
